Body Of Man Washed Through Dredge Pipe May Be Deckhand

BODY FOUND ON FLOOR OF GARAGE BY BROTHER-IN-LAW, WITH WHOM HE WAS TO VISIT FOR DINNER

THOUGHT THAT OF EUCLID GARRIOR, OF BOSTON, MASS.

Workman Not Seen Since The Dredge Burned In November, 1930

HEAD IS MISSING

Workmen Dug in Sand After Body Was Seen Coming From Pipe Line

Portion of the body of a man believed to be one of the crew of the dredge burned and sunk in the Delaware River off Croydon, November 28, 1930, was washed through the pipe of a dredge off Eddington late yesterday afternoon. Identification is not positive due to condition of the body and the fact that the head is missing. It is believed, however, that the remains are those of Euclid Garrior, 35, Boston.

Garrior was one of the crew of a dredge of the Trimont Dredging Company, of Boston. The dredge caught fire early on the morning of November 28th, 1930, when tanks of oil exploded. Thirteen members of the crew were thrown from their beds and picked their way over a pipe line, stretching from the dredge to the lowlands off Croydon, near the mouth of the Neshaminy Creek. From here they were rescued and taken to the Croydon Square Club where they were given shelter and food.

Upon checking up the members of the crew, it was found that Garrior was the only one missing. He was last seen standing on the deck of the dredge which was being swept from bow to stern by tongues of flame, and some of the rescue crew thought they saw him leap into the water.

Efforts were continued for several weeks in an endeavor to locate the body of Garrior which was believed to be wedged in beneath the ruins of the sunken dredge. Divers searched the ruins of the dredge but were unable to locate the body.

Yesterday afternoon as the huge dredge, "Jamaica Bay" was deepening the channel of the Delaware River off of Eddington near "Sarobia," the estate of Robert L. Logan, the land crew of the dredge was started to see a headless body come through the pipe line that was blowing sand onto the lowlands. The crew at once signalled and the pumping was stopped; and the corpse was dug from its newly-made grave.

Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young was summoned and brought the body to the morgue of the H. S. Rue Estate.

The belief prevails that the corpse is that of Garrior and the crew of the "Jamaica Bay" said they would make an effort to locate the head by digging at various spots where the dredge is now engaged. Parts of the debris of the burned dredge also came through the pipe line and this strengthens the theory that the body is that of the missing dredge hand.

The burning of the dredge was one of the most spectacular fires occurring on the river here in years. It was totally destroyed and the loss was said to approximate $250,000.

Supposition is That Wind Blew Doors Closed Which Was Not Noticed Until Fumes Came Heavy—Stepped Back From Motor As If On Way to Get Out Into the Air

The body of Frank H. Aita, 32, was found upon the floor of his garage, Fourth avenue, early last evening. Death was due to carbon-monoxide gas.

Aita, apparently, had been dead more than an hour. He had evidently stepped back from the motor of his car and attempted to walk to the doors, which had blown partly shut, when he dropped to the floor, overcome by the fumes from the motor of his car.

Mr. Aita was the assistant treasurer of The Bristol Trust Company, with which institution he had been associated for the past 15 years. He had held the office of assistant treasurer for the past four years.

Aita left his employment last evening at about 5.15 and went to his home, where it is presumed he attended to the furnace and then went to his garage to work on the motor of his car. His wife, Frances, was at the home of her sister, Mrs. G. Cattani, Farragut avenue and Garfield street, where she was spending the day. Mr. Aita had lunch with the Cattani family and it was his intention to return there for the evening meal, also.

When Mr. Aita did not arrive at the Cattani home in time for the evening meal, Mr. Cattani telephoned to his residence, also to the Trust Company and the residence of Mr. Aita's parents, as well. Failing to learn his whereabouts, Mr. Cattani went to the Aita home on Fourth avenue, off Beaver street, and as he drove in the driveway leading to the garage was startled to see smoke issuing from the partly closed doors.

Cattani hurried from his car and pulling the doors of the garage open was horrified to see his brother-in-law lying flat upon his back on the floor, near the doors.

The motor of the car was running and the lights burning. The left side of the hood was raised and there were tools on the floor. Both of Aita's hands were soiled, showing that he had been tinkering about the motor.

A physician called stated there was sufficient gas in the garage to kill many people.

Aita's body was found at about 6.35. The deceased was a native of Bristol and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Saviero Aita, Penn street. He attended the Bristol public schools and also Peirce Business College, Philadelphia. He was universally respected and admired by a large number of people because of his industry, honesty and sterling qualities of young manhood.

The survivors are his wife, three brothers, four sisters, mother and father.

He was a member of the Knights of Columbus, Loyal Order of Moose and an honorary member of St. Ann's Holy Name Society.

Funeral services will be held Friday morning at nine o'clock from the late residence of the deceased, with solemn high mass in St. Ann's Church at 10 o'clock, and burial in St. Mark's Cemetery.

The Italian community as well as a large circle of his American friends and acquaintances were shocked, last night, when word of Aita's sudden death became known about town.

Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young viewed the body and issued a certificate of accidental death.

THE STATE IN PARENT ROLES

It is hardly a square deal to parents to persuade them that their duties and responsibilities toward their children have been taken over by governmental and welfare agencies and then, when the children turn out badly, berate the parents for neglectfulness.

There has been apparent for a number of years a process of taking out of the parents' hands the guardianship of the child. More and more, have juvenile courts, the schools, welfare agencies, movements and organizations assumed responsibility for the physical, moral and mental well-being of the nation's children, especially in the more populous areas.

As a consequence, some parents have lost their sense of responsibility and their children have ceased to recognize parental authority. To criticize parents who have been encouraged to resign their child-raising duties to the state or public agencies is unfair.

The accusation that the children of this generation are more incorrigible than those of former generations can only be accepted as an admission that the tremendous amount of child welfare work done in recent years has been more harmful than beneficial.

Even though the younger generation is more unruly and wayward—and there are many parents who proudly claim that there was never a better crop of youth than the present—the advocates of the Spartan theory of child raising prejudice their case by inveighing against the alleged indifference of parents and talking so loudly of the unruly state of the youth of today.

HORSES AND RAILROADS

Railroads in Australia are meeting much for same competition from automobiles as are railroads in America. They are using one means of fighting autos that American rail magnates and legislators haven't tried.

Godfrey Morgan, minister for railroads in Queensland, rides to Parliament on horseback. Horses, he and his followers state without much fear of contradiction, do not interfere with railroad passenger traffic. They boost freight traffic by necessitating shipments of fodder from which the railroads derive considerable revenue.

It is a picturesque theory, but it's too late to try it out in this country. Here the horse has already been relegated to the bridle path.

Father lost his only chance of salvaging something out of Christmas when the ragman cut his prices.

Mother used to call them "catchy" tunes. Daughter likes them croony.

Even though the allies don't pay for it, America won't take back the world war.

The girl who makes a Leap Year proposal in 1932 will have to have a good job to be accepted.

Japan's new premier says his country would not take Manchuria as a gift. There is something in that proverb that one prizes most the things he must fight for.

SYNOPSIS

Lovely Fanchon Meredith was wanted by the San Francisco police in connection with a murder committed by her sweetheart, "Tony." Fanchon did not know he was a gunman. She escapes by airplane under the name of "Smith." Aboard is Evelyn Howard, whom Fanchon had met on a voyage from Hawaii. Evelyn is going to New York to live with her aunt, the wealthy Mrs. Carstairs, whom she never saw. The plane crashes and Fanchon is the only survivor. To get away from Tony and the past, she goes to the Carstairs home as "Evelyn." A strong bond of affection grows between Mrs. Carstairs and her "niece." Collin Carstairs, the son, is at first antagonistic because of his "cousin's" Hawaiian escapades and her self-righteous attitude when his mother offered aid, but Fanchon's sincerity overcomes his objections. They fall in love. After a happy summer at Southampton, Fanchon makes her debut in New York. Collin, though realizing their relationship is a barrier, cannot resist professing his love. Fanchon cannot acknowledge hers without revealing her identity. Later, Tony locates Fanchon and informs her that Evelyn is alive, but has lost her memory. He threatens to expose Fanchon unless she introduces him to Mrs. Carstairs as "Cesare Gili." He calls at the Carstairs home and is accepted by Mrs. Carstairs and Collin although they are skeptical of him. Fanchon has no alternative but to agree to Tony's demands that she induce Mrs. Carstairs to wear her emeralds to the Van Suydam Ball. Tony wears a Romeo costume similar to Collin's. On the way to the ball, Collin and Fanchon profess their love. Fanchon slips away and returns home with Tony. The latter stays on the terrace awaiting an opportunity to steal the jewels. Fanchon frustrates Tony's plans and has Mrs. Carstairs summon Collin. Tony reveals Fanchon's identity. The latter relates her story. Tony promises to disclose Evelyn's whereabouts if freed.

CHAPTER XXIX

Collin laughed. His face, worn and tired, lighted with authentic amusement. He said to Fanchon briefly, "Light him a cigarette, will you? And give it to him. Carefully. He is, of course, to remember that I am a good shot."

She did so. Tony inserted it between his lips and drew a long breath. Mrs. Carstairs had left the room. In another room they heard her say, "Long distance, please."

While they waited Collin asked: "What did you say your name was—your given name?"

"Fanchon," she answered low, knowing he spoke to her.

"Tell me, Fanchon—I can't look at you, I have to keep my eyes on your friend, Tell me—why?"

"I have," she whispered.

"No, I understand all that. But, why? Remember our drive, through the park. Why . . . ?" he urged her. His voice was something that pulled at her heartstrings.

She said, evasively:

"I had meant, you know, after the hue and cry died down to slip away from all of you, where no one would ever find me."

"Of course. But you stayed. And that brings me back to—why?"

She said, "I think you know."

"You do love me then?" asked Collin quietly, his eyes still on Tony.

"Yes," said Fanchon, "I do love you, Collin."

Tony said something under his breath.

"I understand Italian," Collin told him. "I am sorry to have to conduct this inquiry with an audience, but it can't be helped. That is all I wanted to know—Fanchon."

He spoke lightly. But he looked years younger. Mrs. Carstairs was rising; she had made her connection, it had gone through without difficulty, at that late dawn-approaching hour. She was speaking eagerly. They could not hear her words. After what seemed a long time during which there was silence in the library, she came back to them. Her face was flushed and her eyes very sad.

"He lied," she said, to Fanchon.

"Evelyn—died. And under the name of Miss Smith. She is buried out there. There is a death certificate. All necessary proof. We will go out," she said softly, "and bring her home."

Collin leaped through the broken windows after him.

Fanchon screamed, suddenly, her hand clenched to her mouth too late, her nerves taut to the breaking point.

"Tony—why did you do it—why?"

He said, evenly:

"I thought perhaps it would be a little hold over you, my dear. I—wasn't sure of you. Later, if my little plan had worked out all right, I would have told you—"

"Then how did you find me?" she demanded wildly.

"By asking. By describing. I showed the doctor . . . your picture. Do you recall it . . . we had it taken one day together, at an amusement place? . . . 'This is the girl who died?'"

I asked. He looked puzzled. "No, that is Miss Howard," he answered. "It is a very good likeness." I made further inquiries and slowly arrived at a little of the truth. The rest is as I have already told you, your photograph in the New York papers and so the pieces fitted into the puzzle and soon the whole thing lay in my hands."

"Now," he ended defiantly, "what are you going to do with me? With her?"

He looked at Collin as he spoke.

"Turn you over to the police," For attempted robbery," Collin answered pleasantly.

"They have my record here," said Tony. "I'll go up for long stretch. I'm wanted badly in San Francisco. It will all break in the papers. Fanchon's part of it. Your part."

Fanchon said, wildly,

"You're not to think of me—Collin. Just of yourself and your mother."

"While you are thinking," remarked Tony suddenly, "I'd like a breath of fresh air!"

He rose, quite free. His hand was still holding the cigarette . . . he had burned through the cord about his legs. He plunged through the doors onto the terrace. There were fire escapes around on the other part of the roof. There was a crash of glass. Collin leaped through the broken windows after him, heedless of his bare feet. The women stayed where they were, held by shock. Fanchon, her knees breaking under her, slid to the floor and somehow got to Mrs. Carstairs on her knees.

"Will you ever forgive me?" she said. "Collin—I'm afraid for him."

The other woman laid a hand on her hair.

"Hush . . . Collin is armed," she said softly . . . "wait . . ."

She rose, and went forward to ring for Jameson, to arouse the night watchman also. But there was a scream. A high-pitched, terrible scream. Mrs. Carstairs stood still. Her hand was on the bell. Every vestige of color had drained from her face. Her face was gray and empty. "Not—Collin . . . ?" she asked softly—"not—Collin . . . ?"

Fanchon could not speak. Her eyes were distended in horror. She held her throat with one hand.

A moment passed. It was a year. It was eternity.

Someone stood at the shattered French window. It was Collin. He was white. He spoke hoarsely. The gun was limp in his hand.

"Over the parapet to the flat roof!"—he said, dully—"I didn't fire . . . then . . . I waited till he was by the fire escape . . . he pulled a knife on me . . . I . . . fired . . . He has fallen," said Collin, "to the street . . ."

The entire world went black before Fanchon's eyes. She was falling, too; it was like the accident repeated in a nightmare . . . there was cold sweat on her body, she felt deathly sick . . . she lost consciousness . . . hearing exclamations . . . feeling an arm hold her, bear her up toward light. But there was no light.

Lunch Is Served

THE car mounted the hill's crest and raced down into the valley. Marian Wright leaned forward eagerly.

"At this rate," she exclaimed, "we'll be there for lunch!"

"And I hope they're expecting us," her husband added. "I'm hungry already."

Marian looked disconcerted. "Now I remember! They wanted us for lunch, but I said we'd arrive too late!"

"You didn't reckon with this new car!" her husband replied, patting the steering wheel affectionately. "But it's all right. Telephone them when we stop for gas."

They arrived promptly at noon. "In time for lunch!" was the greeting. "And it's a good thing you called, Marian. Bread and butter was about all you'd have had, otherwise!"

AFTER TRENTON, WASHINGTON NEXT WON ANOTHER VICTORY AT PRINCETON ON JANUARY 3, 1777, BUT LOST HIS FRIEND HUGH MERCER, THE FREDERICKSBURG DOCTOR, WHO HAD BECOME A GREAT GENERAL. Meadowbrook and A. O. H. Will Clash Here Tonight

Tonight on the Hibernians' floor the A. O. H. basketball five will meet the fast Meadowbrook Club, of Trenton. In the preliminary game the Hibs' Reserves will meet the Fifth Ward All-Stars.

The A. O. H. lineup will be composed of the stars of the A. O. H. Basketball League. The Meadowbrook club needs no introduction, having played in this locality for several years. Included in their lineup will be Birchy, Lawrence, Beetle, Rich, and David.

The games will commence at eight o'clock, sharp.

Tullytown Will Attempt To Win Tonight's Ray

Having lost their opening game of the season, the Tullytown A. A. basketball five will attempt to win its first game tonight when it meets the strong Asbury Club, of Trenton. In the first game of the evening the Tullytown Reserves will meet a five from New Hope.

The Asbury Club defeated Tullytown twice last year and the locals will be out seeking revenge. Rogers, Roe, Lawler, Connors and Lake will make up the Tullytown lineup.

The games will begin at eight o'clock.

Two Basketball Tilts Are Won by Bensalem Teams

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Jan. 13.—The gymnasium at Bensalem was the scene of two very exciting contests waged between the girls of Bensalem and Southampton and the boys of the above mentioned schools.

The girls played the first game, and Bensalem won by the score of 22 to 5. The star for Bensalem was Mary Clayton, a senior and left forward of the team. Although the game was a one-sided affair, it was extremely interesting. Miss Florence Gerbert, graduate of Bensalem, and now a student at Temple University, showed how non-partisan she could be when she officiated at the contest.

The game that followed between the boys of the opposing schools was a "wow" if there ever was one. Both teams were on their toes every single minute of the game and the leather covered sphere was going all over the floor. Bensalem showed very poor defense in the first few minutes, allowing Southampton to score three field goals in succession, but the game tightened and Bensalem came back to make the score 6 to 5 at the end of the first quarter. Jack Mortimer and William Buddle were the aggressors for the home team. The score at half time was 16 to 10, favor Bensalem and from that point on Bensalem was ahead. Several players were put out of the game because of four personal fouls against them and the substitutes carried on in fine style. When the final whistle blew the score was 36 for Bensalem and 26 for Southampton.

Sore Throat Is Dangerous

A sore throat often leads to serious illness. Stop it at once. Take Thoxine, a prescription made exclusively for throat ailments; not a gargle. The first swallow relieves the soreness in a few minutes; and goes direct to the internal cause, preventing further trouble.

Most coughs are caused by an irritated throat. Thoxine stops these at once. Safe for the whole family — guaranteed no dope. Money back if not satisfied. 35c. Cameron's Drug Store and all other good drug stores. —(Adv.)

"I was afraid Grandfather would be Shocked.."

"HES rather a bossy old darling, and I didn't know how he'd like the idea of my smoking."

"The first time I lit a Chesterfield in front of him, he sniffed like an old war-horse... and I braced myself for trouble. But all he said was, 'That's good tobacco, Chickabiddy.'"

"But I still think that if he hadn't been so impressed by the quality of Chesterfield, the old dear might have been less agreeable. Human nature is like that!"

"Grandfather raised tobacco in his younger days, so he knows what's what, I don't, of course—but I do know that Chesterfields are milder. It's wonderful to be able to smoke whenever you want, with no fear you'll smoke too many."

"And it doesn't take a tobacco expert to prove that Chesterfield tobaccos are better. They taste better... that's proof enough. Never too sweet. No matter when I smoke them... or how many I smoke... they always taste exactly right.

"They must be absolutely pure... even to the paper which doesn't taste at all. In fact... as the ads say... 'They Satisfy!'"
